Great Neck Water Pollution Control District Welcomes Gina Sillitti to Its Facility

Assemblywoman Tours Water Treatment Plant

Great Neck, N.Y. (June 9, 2021)— The Great Neck Water Pollution Control District (GNWPCD) recently welcomed State Assemblywoman Gina Sillitti to its water treatment facility for a tour of its operations. During the informative meeting, the Assemblywoman was brought up to date on what makes the GNWPCD one of the most energy-efficient, environmentally-friendly and cost-effective wastewater treatment facilities on Long Island.

“It was a pleasure to show Assemblywoman Sillitti the operation of the facility at the Great Neck Water Pollution Control District,” said GNWPCD Chairman Steve Reiter. “When our elected officials see what we do firsthand, it provides them with a greater understanding of the importance of our work and some of the issues we face in providing this service.”

The tour started off with a detailed presentation of the District’s chief goals, which have always been using innovation and advanced technology in order to maintain sustainable water treatment practices. With its current treatment methods, the District conserves over 27 million gallons of drinking water per year. While the District already uses some of the most effective practices available, it is constantly looking to advance its ability to treat the area’s wastewater and has a number of conservation, environmental and money-saving initiatives in the works.

“I learned so much and was thoroughly impressed by this state-of-the-art facility,” said Assemblywoman Sillitti. “I never knew a water pollution district could be so immaculate! We truly appreciate all of the District’s efforts behind running this operation so effectively and efficiently—saving hundreds of thousands of taxpayer dollars in the process. This facility is the envy of all of New York.”
